

Educators' FAQ

Below are the answers to some of the top questions educators ask about the scholarship application process. Head to Scholarships.com to learn even more.

Q: When should my students start looking for scholarships?

A: Students should begin searching for scholarships as early as possible. There are awards for students of all education levels, so applying early ensures that no opportunities are missed.

Q: What info must a student provide to apply for scholarships?

A: The exact information a student will need depends on the scholarship, but common required materials include the student's contact information, grade reports, letters of recommendation, and essays.

Q: What are the best scholarships for my students?

A: The best scholarships for any particular student are the ones they have the greatest chance to win. Specialized awards, like local awards and minority-based funds, often fit this description.

Q: Where can I find more resources to help my students?

A: Scholarships.com has all the resources you need to support your students. Sign up for a free educator account to receive fresh scholarship information in your email inbox each week.
